Andante
When sor _ row clouds thy dream of mirth, When promised joys, which fade too soon, When flow'rs lie scent _ less on the earth, Nor hope is left to cheer thy gloom; Oh! then while sad thy heart may be, Pensez à moi ma Chère a_mie! Oh! then while sad thy heart may be,

Pensez à moi ma Chère a_mie!

When music sheds its sweetest lay,
When dying winds are heard at night,
And fancy with its magic sway,
Shall sooth thy breast with visions bright;
Then while thy heart is calmn and free,
Pensez à moi ma Chère amie.

Fate may sunder ties the nearest,
As now it tears this form from thine,
Hearts whose love is purest, dearest,
Feel the blight that's withering mine;
Yet still thrô life 'twill cling to thee,
Pensez à moi ma Chère amie.

But now adieu! one pearly tear
Is stealing down thy fever'd cheek,
To kindred souls how sweet, how dear!
Expressing more than tongue can speak;
Pure as that tear my heart shall be,
Pensez à moi ma Chère amie.
